INTRODUCTION

THE wonderful development of Edmonton as a city and the capital of a Province has probably never been equalled in the history of the world. Even a casual survey of the city at the present time must force one to the conclusion that cities do not grow—they are built.

And while it is always admitted that Edmonton is the logical centre of a wonderful country and is bound to become a city of the first magnitude, it still remains a fact that the men who have made Edmonton have used their opportunities to the utmost advantage.

It is the intention of this volume to commemorate a portion of the work of these men and to provide likenesses and authoratative data of their lives for the use of the press of the world.

HISTORY

WHEN in 1865 old Jimmy Gibbons came up from the mountains winding down mostly on foot into Edmonton, there wasn't anything here except the Hudson's Bay and not much of that. But the river contained some gold and so the resourceful Jimmy, together with his comrades, proceeded to wash gold and some copper filings exchanging the same to the all powerful Company for such supplies as they needed. One or two of his comrades took to farming, raising wild oats which they disposed of easily for $2.50 per bushel.

Then in 1876 Donald Ross drifted in and decided that the location for a stopping house was ideal. He founded what has since become the Edmonton Hotel, and was in the unique position of being able to inform any of his boarders who complained of the food, that they could go to the next stopping place—Portage la Prairie. Mr. Ross in addition to being the proprietor of a stopping house rich in historical anecdote, was also a great gardener and the very first to exploit and proclaim the agricultural possibilities of the country.

In 1880 Frank Oliver packed in from Winnipeg with a small press and some type and started the Bulletin, which he published weekly during the winter months occupying the summer in going to Winnipeg for paper and ink. The Bulletin has since become a great daily and its proprietor one of the foremost politicians in the West. About the time of Mr. Oliver's arrival the town consisted of five white families and some breeds, but people were being attracted this way and soon what was known as "claim jumping" began to worry the few original inhabitants. As the country was unsurveyed the settler had no actual rights in the land and the newcomers attempted to squat and build themselves shacks wherever they fancied. This led to the election of a vigilance committee with M. McCauley, a sturdy pioneer, as its captain. Whenever a newcomer attempted to squat on land already claimed he was promptly warned and if he still persisted, the committee proceeded to throw his shack over the river bank into what was called the vigilantes' depository. This action was highly exciting at times but proved very effective.

By this time the Canadian Pacific had reached Calgary and all freight was hauled from there. The express passenger rate for a quick journey to Calgary was at this time One Hundred Dollars.

And so the village grew slowly until in 1891 the Canadian Pacific put a regular service on their C. and E. branch and while it took two days to get to Calgary, it was a great improvement over the ox trail and considerable grain and cattle were shipped over the new road, which was the first real outlet for the agricultural resources of the country. Lots on Jasper Avenue at this time were sold for seven dollars and dollars were scarcer then than thousands are now.

In 1896 Edmonton experienced its first real boom. That was the year of the Klondyke rush and thousands of prospectors outfitted here for the perilous journey north which only a small percentage of them survived. But they brought more money into Edmonton than the town had ever seen before and gave it its first real impetus towards becoming the great city which it now is.

About this time the electric light and waterworks systems were installed placing Edmonton in a leading position among the towns of the West, which place it has held very consistently ever since.

In 1905 Edmonton was granted a charter as a city and started on her glorious career with several innovations which have since made her famous. The principal one of these was the single tax or what is known as the land tax. All the revenue of the City of Edmonton is derived from a direct tax on the land; buildings and business and personal effects are exempted. This system which is designed to encourage the tradesman and discourage real estate speculation has given Edmonton widespread publicity as the first city in Canada to adopt this new system which is becoming so popular all over the world. Mr. Walker, the City Assessor, has always been very active in spreading the single tax doctrine.

Another feature of Edmonton's Charter was the adoption of the commission form of executive control. This is not government by commission which is being agitated very strongly just now, but is a system in which the usual council exert the usual legislative functions, while the appointed commissioners look after the executive details and carry out the instructions of the council. This system was probably the forerunner of the elected commission system which is attracting such widespread notice at the present time and is likely to be adopted by many large cities.

Edmonton has always boasted an unexcelled school system. In the very early days the few settlers that were here clubbed together and paid a teacher themselves, and as soon as the land was surveyed, after a big fight at the polls, they formed a school district with power to tax property for school purposes. From that time forward the growth of the Edmonton schools has been marvelous. Edmonton has now nine of the finest public school buildings to be found anywhere in the world. Conspicuous in this good work have been Mr. M. McCauley, a member of the board for sixteen years and many times Chairman, Mr. A. B. May for four years chairman and Mr. G. B. Turner, the architect to the school board, whose beautiful buildings have attracted much attention.

Cheap power has been a very large factor in Edmonton's development, and this city stands to-day as a leader in cheap power and light supplied by a municipally owned plant the great success of which is due to Mr. Ormsby's untiring efforts to build it up and make it the success that it is.

The history of Edmonton for the last few years has largely been a history of building and real estate operation. The wonderful expansion of Edmonton as a commercial centre led to an enormous demand for buildings and property. Foremost in supplying these demands have been the firms of York and McNamara, Louis Arsenault, Scott, Phillips & Co., Sage, Appleton & Co., Alberta Agencies Ltd. and Leo Savard.

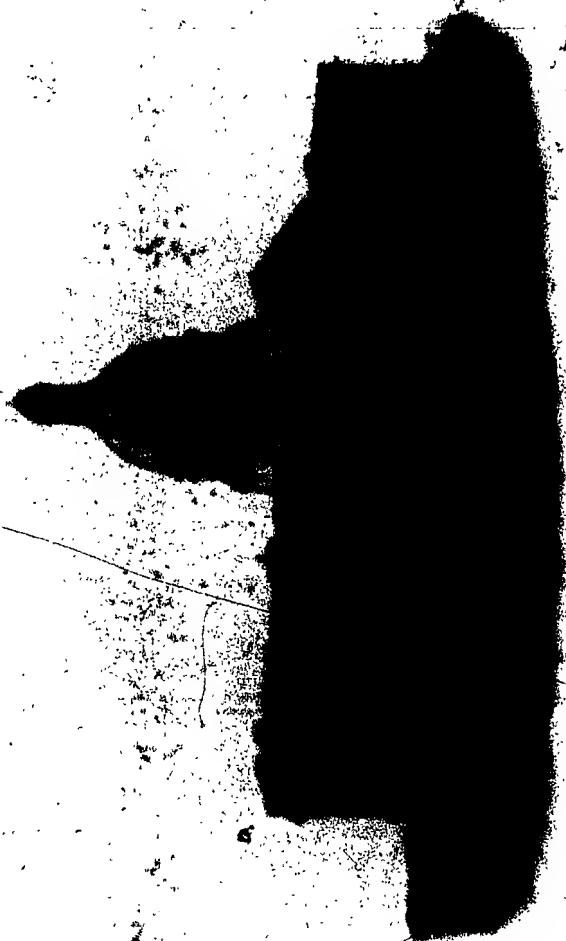

Messrs. Barnes and Gibbs, H. A. Magoon and James Henderson, Architects, have been makers of Edmonton in a very real sense in that they have designed a large number of the most conspicuous buildings that grace the streets of this city and they expect to build many more. The firm of McClellan and Balfour have also been active in this regard by building up a very large business in lumber and supplies for these buildings.

The history of the theatrical business in Edmonton has been unique and rapid. From the travelling shows of early days which used to hold forth in Robertson's Hall and later in the Thistle Rink, the business grew so quickly that in 1907 the Edmonton Opera House was built and devoted exclusively to theatrical performances. The Empire Theatre quickly followed with a high class vaudeville performance and then in 1912 Pantages opened one of the finest theatres in the country to house his vaudeville which is in a class by itself and provides adequate entertainment for Edmonton theatre goers the year round.
